VEGETABLE GARDEN- ORGANIC FARMING

This includes setting up vegetable gardens in college which is meant to promote a vegetable farming culture among all sections of society at the individual and institutional level. There are many places for us to get food for various prices that are affordable or at a high price. Most of the affordable food is not healthy and this can be the same for higher priced food but most of the time healthy food is overpriced. Gardening is an effort to learn and needs time before it is useful. And after all, there is a reward of fresh produce to eat. Campus vegetable garden will provide a solution to managing stress in college. Dr. Araty Sasikumar took initiative for a vegetable garden. A student project was also conducted on the topic AESA- Agroecosystem based IPM on cruciferous vegetables.

Microbiology lab

Microbiology department conducted a water quality analysis test to identify the portability of drinking water from different areas. The test was conducted at microbiology lab, first we collected water samples from different areas and the test is done through different steps. The presumptive is screening test to the sample water for the presence of coliform organisms. Some water samples shows negative to this test and some shows positive. The positive tested samples considered as unsafe so the confirmed test is performed. For this, a loopful of suspension from a positive tube were inoculated, then examined macroscopically. Through this test we can identify the drinking water quality.
